

BEST COPY

AVAILABLE

11-426

Page 1

Disputes Report

Jensen Tried

To See Dulles

FOIAb3b

The Central Intelligence Agency Wednesday disputed a report that a Danish man, Bang-Jensen, had been tried in vain to see the director of the agency, Allen Dulles, to tell him about alleged Soviet espionage.

A senior agency spokesman, Assistant Secretary of State William E. Miller, issued this statement after a talk with Bang-Jensen on Dec. 18, 1957. At that time, he indicated he had no information about any espionage activities of which he was aware. He stated he was unable to divulge any information about the meeting he did not want to have.

Miller said he had ample opportunity to do so. He had been in the National Review, which has published reports on such matters over the past few months.

Miller said he had ample opportunity to do so. He had been in the National Review, which has published reports on such matters over the past few months.

Miller said he had ample opportunity to do so. He had been in the National Review, which has published reports on such matters over the past few months.

Miller said he had ample opportunity to do so. He had been in the National Review, which has published reports on such matters over the past few months.

Miller said he had ample opportunity to do so. He had been in the National Review, which has published reports on such matters over the past few months.

Miller said he had ample opportunity to do so. He had been in the National Review, which has published reports on such matters over the past few months.

Miller said he had ample opportunity to do so. He had been in the National Review, which has published reports on such matters over the past few months.

Miller said he had ample opportunity to do so. He had been in the National Review, which has published reports on such matters over the past few months.

Miller said he had ample opportunity to do so. He had been in the National Review, which has published reports on such matters over the past few months.

Miller said he had ample opportunity to do so. He had been in the National Review, which has published reports on such matters over the past few months.

CPYRIGHT